

Impact Analysis of Middle East War Shock on Sri Lankan Stock Market Activity

The Sri Lankan equity market did not experience a collapse in trading activity following the Middle East geopolitical shock around early March 2026. On the contrary, overall market activity increased notably. At the aggregate level:

- Average daily volume increased from 201.5 Mn shares to 213.4 Mn shares (+5.9%)
- Average daily turnover rose from LKR 4.02 Bn to LKR 4.80 Bn (+19.3%)

This indicates that the market became more active in value terms after the event. However, higher turnover should not be interpreted as a sign of reduced risk. The increase in activity was accompanied by weaker market breadth, higher concentration, and signs of selective risk-off behavior.

What the data says about market behaviour

1. Immediate post-war reaction was strong, but not broad-based

In the first post-war week, market activity surged significantly, with average daily volume rising to 251.9 Mn shares (+25.0% compared to the pre-war average) and turnover increasing to LKR 5.13 Bn (+27.4%). This sharp uptick reflects a strong event-driven response, as investors actively repositioned their portfolios in reaction to the geopolitical shock.

However, in the second post-war week, activity showed signs of moderation. Average daily volume declined to 182.6 Mn shares (-9.4% vs. pre-war levels), while turnover remained relatively elevated at LKR 4.54 Bn (+12.8%). This shift suggests a transition from a broad-based market reaction to more selective, stock-specific positioning. Although overall activity eased, the sustained higher turnover indicates continued portfolio adjustments and active trading in selected counters.

2. Prices weakened across most counters

Across 288 comparable stocks, 261 recorded price declines while only 26 showed price increases, with the median price change standing at approximately -6.9%. This reveals a clear divergence in market behavior: despite the increase in overall turnover, the majority of stocks experienced price deterioration. Such a pattern typically indicates a reduction in exposure across a broad range of counters, alongside capital rotating into a limited number of stocks. It also suggests weak underlying market participation, where strong headline activity masks a softer and more fragile internal market structure.

3. Trading became more concentrated

Trading activity became more concentrated in a smaller group of stocks, particularly: Commercial Bank, Hatton National Bank, Sampath Bank and LOLC Holdings. Along with other names such as DFCC Bank, NDB Bank, Hayleys PLC, ACL Cables, and Royal Ceramics Lanka.

This shift is further reflected in the rising concentration ratios, where the top five stocks' share of total market turnover increased from 18.9% to 21.9%, while the top ten stocks' share rose from 34.3% to 36.2%. Such a trend highlights growing liquidity concentration in the market, with a larger portion of trading activity being driven by a limited number of counters.

4. Key risk patterns visible in the dataset

a) Breadth risk

This is the biggest signal in file. Although market turnover rose, most stocks declined in price. That means the rise in market activity was not broad-based confidence, but more likely: repositioning, defensive trading, forced selling in weaker names, and selective buying in a narrow set of liquid counters. This kind of setup is risky because the market can look healthy from turnover alone while the underlying participation is weak.

b) Liquidity concentration risk

Post-war turnover became more concentrated in a smaller group of names. This means: institutional and active traders likely focused on a few liquid counters, many smaller names remained exposed to thin-market conditions, and price discovery in less active counters may have become more unstable. If fear rises again, those less-liquid counters can see sharp price gaps with limited exit opportunities.

c) Price-impact risk / panic-selling risk

A number of relatively active counters showed the pattern:

price down + volume up sharply + turnover up sharply

Counter	Price Change	Volume Change	Turnover Change
ACL	-6.6%	+189.1%	+168.0%
AEL	-2.0%	+93.7%	+86.4%
COMB	-9.0%	+259.5%	+228.8%
DFCC	-8.0%	+63.8%	+50.8%
HAYL	-4.7%	+135.2%	+123.2%
RCL	-8.1%	+107.0%	+91.0%

These counters were actively traded, but the average price still fell. That suggests heavy two-way trading with a net negative price outcome, which is a warning sign of market stress or profit-taking pressure.

d) Liquidity-dry-up risk

Some counters showed a severe post-war contraction in trading activity:

Counter	Price Change	Volume Change	Turnover Change
RHL(N)	-6.9%	-91.2%	-91.9%
PLC(N)	-6.2%	-74.7%	-76.7%
CLND(N)	+1.6%	-74.6%	-75.4%
SIL(N)	-6.2%	-75.5%	-74.8%

This is important because even if prices do not collapse immediately, falling liquidity itself is a risk. In such counters, any new wave of selling can create: wide bid-ask spreads, price gapping, and difficulty exiting positions at fair value.

e) Speculative rotation risk

A small group of counters showed strong post-war increases in both activity and price, for example:

Counter	Price Change	Volume Change	Turnover Change
HNBF(N)	+6.3%	+147.1%	+168.7%
LIOC(N)	+2.5%	+574.4%	+599.4%
SHL	+19.1%	+98.9%	+148.4%
HVA(N)	+44.2%	+38.6%	+100.3%

These may indicate resilience or thematic buying, but they also carry speculative momentum risk, especially if the move was driven by event sentiment rather than fundamentals.

5. What does this mean for investors

Based on the dataset, the Sri Lankan market’s post-war response can be summarized as “higher turnover, weaker breadth, and more selective liquidity.” This combination typically reflects a cautious-to-high-risk market environment rather than a fully healthy risk-on phase, as increased activity is not supported by broad-based strength.

From an investment perspective, headline turnover can be misleading. While overall market activity increased, the majority of counters experienced price declines, indicating underlying weakness. At the same time, liquidity has become increasingly concentrated in a smaller group of stocks, reducing broader market stability as participation narrows. Several liquid counters also showed signs of heavy selling pressure, where rising volumes alongside falling prices suggest potential distribution rather than accumulation.

In addition, a number of stocks became significantly less liquid following the event, increasing exit risk for investors, particularly in second-tier and small-cap counters. Volatility also remains elevated, as the first post-war week reflected a strong shock-driven reaction, while the second week showed only partial normalization rather than a full stabilization of market conditions.

6. Conclusion

From a practical market perspective, the dataset suggests that large-cap and more liquid counters were primarily used as the main adjustment channel during the post-war period. At the same time, broader market sentiment weakened, indicating that the increase in activity was not driven by widespread confidence. Instead, stock selection became significantly more important than overall market direction, as performance varied widely across counters.

Overall, the Middle East war shock appears to have increased trading activity in Sri Lanka's stock market, but the underlying market tone became more fragile rather than stronger. The post-war period was characterized by higher total turnover, negative price breadth, increased concentration in a limited number of active counters, signs of selective panic selling or distribution in certain stocks, and a noticeable decline in liquidity in others. In essence, while the market became more active, it also became more risk-sensitive. The key risks emerging from the dataset include deterioration in market breadth, rising liquidity concentration, evidence of panic-driven selling in actively traded counters, and growing illiquidity in weaker name.
